At this year’s National Patrol Rifle Championships, we had 73 shooters who fired a cold bore shot at the head you see in this post after doing 10 pushups or air squats within 30 seconds time (includes the exercise). They fired from a modified prone position off the top of a berm simulating the roof top at 110 yards, which is shorter than the reported actual attempt, of 130 yards. The 8”x11” head target in this event was not moving and the cranial vault (CV) is clearly defined with black marker. As you can see from the stats, the chip shot, as many TV experts claimed it to be, turned out to be more difficult than many people think, even for some well-trained LEO’s, MIL and qualified citizen shooters who participated in this year’s event.
